

The Surprising Power of Small Habits

Chapter One - A sample book publication page

The first clue that this document is a book page is its layout. It has a chapter number, a centered chapter title, long narrative paragraphs, and a traditional reading format rather than a table or form.

A publication page often contains flowing body text, page numbers, chapter headings, author or publisher references, and sometimes ISBN or copyright information. These are useful clues for a document analysis system.

Unlike a report or invoice, this page does not depend on rows, columns, totals, form fields, signatures, or labelled boxes. Its structure is mainly literary and paragraph based.

For testing, this file is designed so an NLP pipeline should find book and publication clues such as chapter, page, title, author, publisher, publication, copyright and ISBN.

A visual pipeline may still detect many contours and corners because the page contains many text lines, but the final document type should be supported by the publication-style text evidence.
